

Skagerrakschlacht.
Vorgeschichte – Ereignis – Verarbeitung
(The Battle of Jutland.
Background – Event – Aftermath)

Edited by Michael Epkenhans, Jörg Hillmann and Frank Nögler
 The Battle of Jutland of 1916 between England and Germany was one of the biggest conventional sea battles in history. It was fought with a spectacular deployment of material, but neither the course of the battle nor the undecided outcome were crucial for the conclusion of the First World War. The essays by English and German experts look at the rivalry at sea between their countries, their strategies in the First World War, their ultimate clash in the Baltic Sea and the cultures of remembrance that developed in both countries in the following decades.

Kaufleute, Seefahrer und Piraten im Mittelmeerraum der Neuzeit.
Entgrenzende Diaspora – verbindende Imaginationen
(Merchants, Sailors and Pirates in the Mediterranean in Modern Times. De-limitation through Diaspora – Association through Imaginationen)

By Desanka Schwara, Luise Müller, Patrick Krebs, Ivo Haag, Marcel Gasteli
 Streets, bustling squares and imposing buildings: the harbour towns around the Mediterranean were similar in structure and colour. In these metropolises, sailors and merchants, pirates and consuls, people from all over the world met there on their search for income, adventure, and new opportunities. Even as these people were interacting with a disregard to national and political boundaries, the authors look at the aspects that connected their lives in the cities between Lisbon and Istanbul.

Militärsgeschichte der DDR (Military History of the GDR)

By Winfried Heinemann
 Winfried Heinemann provides us with the first concise outline of the history of the National People's Army of the GDR. He describes its genesis and implementation into the socialist state and looks at a range of systematic topics, such as what repercussions the militarization had on politics and society of the East-German state. He is led by the question as to how far the “sovereign” GDR was able to provide for its own safety without relying on the troops the Soviet Union had stationed in East Germany.
