History of Aboriginal peoples

Aboriginal peoples have lived in Australia for over 60,000 years, making their cultures among the world's oldest continuous cultures. Their histories include rich traditions, art, and deep knowledge of the land. British colonisation from 1788 led to widespread loss and hardship, but Aboriginal cultures have endured.

Kangaroos, Wallabies and Quokkas

Kangaroos are Australia's best-known animals. Wallabies look similar but are smaller and live in forests and grasslands. Quokkas are small, friendly marsupials found on islands near Western Australia.

Young Australian Athletes

Sport is a big part of life in Australia. Many young athletes are already world-class. Stephanie Gilmore is a surfing champion, Pat Cummins leads Australia's cricket team, and Nick Daicos shines in Australian Rules Football.

Dangerous Animals

Australia is home to many dangerous animals, including great white sharks, saltwater crocodiles, and highly venomous species like the box jellyfish and blue-ringed octopus. Even small creatures such as the jack jumper ant can be harmful.

Australia Day

Australia Day is marked on January 26th. It commemorates the arrival of the First Fleet in 1788 and is a national public holiday. The date is controversial: some people believe it should remain on January 26th, while others see it as a day of invasion and loss for Aboriginal peoples.

Indigenous Australian Artists

Australia has many talented artists with First Nations roots, such as Amina Briggs, Baker Boy, and The Kid Laroi, whose work celebrates culture, identity, and inspires change.
